Contact your legislators and tell them you want pets allowed in condos. Go to <http://tinyurl.com/2ya6vq> to find your in-state Florida legislators by your zip code. We have about half of the 50,000 signatures we will need to go for legislation like California's Civil Code 1360.50 which says people who live in association-run housing may have at least one pet.

Then evidence is in: pets help their owners stay healthy, happy, and independent. Pet owners are more active, whether they're taking a daily walk or just changing the litter box, than those who don't own pets. Caring for an animal can help lower your blood pressure, reduce stress, and even lengthen your life."

According to the 2005 American Pet Product Manufacturers Association's National Pet Owners Survey, 63 percent of all United States households have at least one pet. The total number of companion animals includes 74 million dogs and 90 million cats that latter figure representing a five percent increase in feline ownership over the past four years

Why Zero (0)% in 55+ Housing?

Where did this attitude come from: that seniors, a group which could probably MOST benefit from pet companionship, can't have pets?

Many seniors hide cats and small dogs inside their homes, following an all too human need - despite no-pet deed regulations - then LIVE IN FEAR of being found out and being forced to give up beloved companion animals.

You should have the right to choose the way you want to live inside your own home. "Your home is your castle." People just need to be responsible and make an effort to not disturb their neighbors. Let's all get along.
